

Return to SearchOriginal Page: 458Culture (OWC): Azande \(F007\)Region: AfricaSub Region: Central AfricaField Date: 1926-1930Coverage Date: Late 1800s-1930Place Coverage: Zande District, SudanSection Title(S): XIII • XIV

Likewise, I have been told that in such rites as those for spoiling the ventures of other men, described on pages 410-11, the magician may think the spell: 'He sees it (the object used in the rite) with his eyes alone and with his eyes alone he addresses it.'

789Magic791Magicians And Diviners

XIV

I have not often observed that a magician uttering a spell displays great emotion. I have not seen a man making vengeance-magic, but I doubt whether a man so doing speaks and acts with greater vehemence than informants who described the rite to me. Sometimes I have seen magicians speak with unusual intensity, but on most occasions they could not have felt very strongly about the matter as they were acting professionally on behalf of other people. Thus I have heard a magician who was doctoring another man's homestead fiercely urge the medicines to heap misfortune on any witch who should dare to trouble the inmates of the homestead. When a magician is in great trouble he is naturally in a different frame of mind to a magician who is in no trouble. There does not seem to be any constant emotional reaction of magicians during a rite. In most of the rites I have observed the performers acted normally, often joking and laughing till the rite began, when they concentrated on the performance. If a rite is lengthy there will be breaks in ritual action when the magician may talk about secular affairs. If such things as a pot, oil, salt, and so forth are required in the rite he shouts to his wife or son to bring them. I do not think that an inexperienced observer would notice that witch-doctors eating a communal meal of medicines are behaving very differently to a group of men at court eating a communal meal of porridge. The only occasions upon which  459 I saw great emotion displayed by magicians, to judge from their expressions and the tone of their voices, were when they were stirring medicines of some of the closed associations.

152Drives And Emotions791Magicians And Diviners

Human Relations Area Files

755 Prospect Street

New Haven, CT 06511

General Inquiries:  hraf@yale.edu

Issues and Bugs:  hraf-support@yale.edu

Terms and Conditions · Accessibility · Cookie Policy