

Return to Search

Original Page: 78

Culture (OWC): Teda \(MS22\)

Region: Africa

Sub Region: Central Africa

Field Date: 1933-1943

Coverage Date: 1933-1946

Place Coverage: Chad

Section Title(S): ETHNOGRAPHIC DICTIONARY

K

kabanar European metal can, tall and cylindrical, which the Teda use to fill the goatskin bottles with water. It is sometimes carried in a net (M.H. Col. Le C, 151.)

kabin (pl. kabina): corpse.

kadamo: caterpillar.

kādawī: strip of leather that one inserts in a woven strands of a basket as a decoration.

kadihi: entire.

kafo, or kaho: foreskin. The age of circumcision, which was formerly 18 years—according to some old men—is now generally 12 or 13 years and tends to be lowered as a result of the father's desire to see their older sons sooner<sup>117</sup> capable of playing the part of a man and, for example, presiding, so they say, at their funeral sadaga when they die. The operation is entrusted to an experienced man who leads the young boy under a palm tree to the side of the

000

Material Not Relevant

132

Climate

136

Fauna

137

Flora

152

Drives And Emotions

156

Social Personality

157

Personality Traits

172

Prehistory

177

Acculturation And Culture Contact

178

Sociocultural Trends

192

Vocabulary

203

Dissemination Of News And Information

village; some men accompany them, as does the father if the child is very young. The one about to be circumcised is clothed only in a sheepskin which will not rub against the wound after the operation. Then one sits down on a stone in front of a hole and starts to shave the wisps of hair of the child. Then the man performing the operation stuffs the foreskin with goat dung, ties it up and cries out: "ceni owu lano" "little boy, look up" and takes advantage of this to cut, saying: "bismilla" "in the name of God." He then says: "umri wo lano" "man, look down" and sews the wound with thorns and a needle. This is the most painful moment of the operation. If the boy is more than 12 years old, only the quivering of his abdomen betrays his suffering; if he is younger, he often cannot refrain from crying, in spite of all kinds of threats ("if you cry, your belly will be opened with a knife") and wheedling, and he has to be held from behind. The hole in which the hair and the foreskin are dropped is now filled up and a stone is placed over it. The child with difficulty reaches a small tent of mats (are) which was prepared for him near his paternal house. Small boys and girls come to keep him company; his mother brings him food, avoiding generally out of modesty from entering. On the seventh day, if he is healed, his solemn departure takes place, of which his father has informed the entire neighborhood. A woman, generally chosen for her graciousness, rubs his body with fragrant butter, small quantities of which she then distributes among the male and female assistants. A small earring of silver, generally loaned by his sister, is then fastened to his right ear, he is dressed in a handsome boubou, is coiffed with a very beautiful turban, a long collar of beads is put around his neck. He takes in his hand an ornamented stick (kudu) on the tip of which is attached a bead and a small bell. The man who performed the operation takes hold of the other end and thus, one behind the other, they walk around the small hut amidst the you you of the women. Then the child sits down a moment on a little mat which his godfather, if one can call him that, spreads out at the foot of the hut. He then gets up and settles down under a nearby palm tree. The ceremony of gifts begins. A man who is perhaps the sponsor of the child, but who must have, above all, the ability to speak and a good memory, calls upon all present, beginning with the child's own father, to ask what they are giving the one newly circumcised. The importance of the gift depends on the wealth, the degree of kinship and the generosity of each one. However, custom decrees, on the one hand, that the giver offer a little resistance to the urging of the master of ceremonies, in order to emphasize the value of his donation, and, on the other hand, that the latter should make very explicit its nature so that afterwards there will be no dispute. Once the circle of men has been dealt with, he goes on to the women. The day ends with the women dancing; the relatives of the circumcised youth feed the guests. For another seven days, sometimes more, the young boy walks about with his kudu, in particular to accept presents from relatives who were unable to attend his coming-out. (No one assumes, for this would be very shameful, that he willingly refrained from coming in order to avoid giving a gift.) After that, he throws his stick into a well or a pool and resumes his normal life, assuming from then on the duties of manhood.

■ 80118

kafode, or: koyede: uncircumcised.

kafudi: see kofudi.

kaga: grandmother, ancestress (also Kanuri).

kagajirede: proud, either because one does not listen to the advice of anyone or because one refuses to let oneself be outdone in generosity, even by someone richer than oneself. The word implies that one is slightly lacking in good sense.

kagala: commission—counsel.

kagali, or: kayali: hollow stalk of grasses (also Kanuri).

212

Writing

221

Annual Cycle

223

Fowling

224

Hunting And Trapping

231

Domesticated Animals

232

Applied Animal Science

233

Pastoral Activities

234

Dairying

235

Poultry Raising

237

Animal By-Products

241

Tillage

251

Preservation And Storage Of Food

252

Food Preparation

262

Diet

263

Condiments

276

Recreational And Non-Therapeutic Drugs

278

Pharmaceuticals

281

Work In Skins

283

Cordage

285

Mats And Basketry

291

Normal Garb

kage: slender twigs tied together forming a paling and having various uses; enclosure or partition inside houses; arranged in the form of a cage, these plaings constitute the Teda bed that is generally covered with a mat.

kagal, or: kanjal: round hair plaque of uncircumcised children, which young rakes also sometimes wear (synonym of: yokude).

kaima, or: kayiiwa: clothes in general.

kakano: roof of the mouth (also Kanuri).

kakera, or: cecera: gravel.

kal: equal, similar. Teda genna kal: "all Teda are equal."

kala: white camel, particularly admired, of the Tuareg of Aïr.

kalamur, kalapci, kalampur: to embrace, the verb "mar" is added: kalamur mar (I)—kalapci cōg, etc...(he). In order to bid them welcome, little children embrace the knees of their parents or friends of their family. Adults embrace only exceptionally, after a long absence, for instance. Ordinarily, they prefer to shake hands for a long time. See: lahanor.

kalaser, kalasci, kalazer, or: kaar, yegak, kaker: to sharpen.

kalca or: kalja: rope of leaves of the palm tree, date or doom palm.

kalcaner, kalcaini, kancanter: to rub the skin one is tanning with a circular movement in order to soften it.

kallaha: formula of greeting. See: lahanor.

kalemi: yellow, opaque bead; amber, genuine or fake.

kalle (pl. kallea): handsome and brave man, conforming in all respects to the manly ideal of the Teda, preferably young.

kamaye (pl. kamaya): descendant of slave freed for three generations (see article on the slave: boder).

kamay: small clay or wooden container used to hold water.

kambuli: flower; general term in Teda and Kanuri.

kanor, kanci, kantar: to pass, to run out; pass in the sense of spending a moment, spending the night—surpass: to have more—kantede (past participle): more: gona ntoma tire tana do kanteda—"your camels are better looking than mine."

kannar: bracelet made of plaited withes of a plant of this name; dyed green with "goruda"; worn in Kavar.

kanene: edge, edge of a dune.

kanar, kaye, kantar or kandar: to cure oneself, be strong—its  81118 cont.root joined to the verb kosor, 119 "make", forms the verb: to heal—katigesede: he has healed me; kangesede: he has healed you; kangeseri: I will heal you.

kara: hippopotamus (that lives in Lake Chad); whip of hippopotamus skin.

karab: name given in Kavar to a kind of date little appreciated and called in Djado "agoges" and in Tibesti "yobo."

karaga: leather cover of lance head.

karaka (pl. karahaba): wagon.

karaka: caravan: Kanuri word used by the Teda; when it refers to caravans coming from Aïr, they say simply "yuburdei." The word azalai that the French

292
Special Garments

293
Paraphernalia

301
Ornament

302
Personal Grooming

304
Body Alterations

312
Water Supply

325
Metallurgy

326
Smiths And Their Crafts

342
Dwellings

352
Furniture

353
Building Interiors And Arrangement

354
Heating And Lighting Equipment

381
Chemical Engineering

386
Paint And Dye Manufacture

404
Household Machines And Appliances

411
Weapons

412
General Tools

415
Utensils

430
Exchange And Transfers

431
Gift Giving

use is unknown to the Teda as to all the populations who take part in these caravans. However, it is perhaps of Daza origin: aoulai actually means the season following the date harvest, that is to say, October–November and it is precisely the season of the big caravan from Air to Bilma. This caravan is of greater interest to the Kanuri than to the Teda world. Despite efforts of the French Administration to restore the caravans going to Djado, the latter keep as their destination the salt marshes of Bilma and the palm groves of Kawar.—The provisioning of the Teda of Djado then always depends on individual journeys by these (see Kasogo).

karama: (Kanuri word) sorcerer. Sorcery is believed to be wide-spread especially among the Negroes of the South; there are, in fact, no Teda sorcerers, male or female, the individuals afflicted, against their will, with the evil eye being something else (see walamo)—ko karama: "the witch mountain: near Madama she points out the location of the well; but its prominent shapes or a particular atmospheric effect in this overheated hollow makes it appear closer than it actually is to the caravaneer hurrying to arrive, and who sees it diabolically recede as he advances.

karami (pl. karema): worm in cereals or lacustrine worm, or maggot, or even the worm that gets into the hoof of a goat: in order to kill it one must cut an opening in the hoof, put fat in it, then cauterize it with a firebrand, repeating the operation several times.

karanor, Karaye, karantor: to write and to read the Koran; in a wider sense, to teach oneself as one is taught in school—Tugwi tire Nasarga karanere: "I am going to the post to learn French."

karanar, karaki, karānkar: to separate bran and flour.

karar, yogar, karkar: to roll fibers between one's palms to make a cord—to make knots of thread.

82119 cont.

karasu: sorrel that the Teda of Kavar and Djado, and especially the Kanuri cultivate for sauces (Kanuri word).

karenne, or: karea, or: karme: amber of which one finds some unusual necklaces.

karta: cards, generally Spanish, brought by the Arabs. It is usually only the Teda employed as Arab scouts who know how to play them. Generally, they do not play for money. From the complete set of 52 cards they take: 12, sometimes the figures, more often the eight, the nine and the ten. There remains, in order of amount: the ace (umri "man" worth eleven); the three (adebi "women" worth ten); the king (ttozode, worth four, as his name indicates); the queen (aguzunde, worth three); the jack (cude, worth two), finally, the seven, six, five, four and two which are worth nothing.120

The game is played with two sides, two, four or six partners, as the case may be. Before each hand everyone takes a card as reserve. If four play, the partners on the same side show each other their sets before the first and last hand. The one who has made a trick begins the next hand. The winner is the one who, in counting his tricks, adds up the most points. Each of the losers must give him a donkey (imaginary), two if he does not have at least 40 points. The game is played in six rounds; but one side will perhaps be eliminated if it makes less than 40 points twice; or, on the other hand, it may be declared the winner if it has toted up a particularly high number of points. In that case, they say it has won an ox.

To play cards is called: "karta babor": "to strike cards." To take a trick is called: bor, "to eat"; to take from the pile: gunor: "to take"; trump is called kakar, "to cut" is called kobor; "to deal": "geror" (probably from: gerdar: to divide); to put down a card: dunor: "to introduce," or: lobor: "to throw." Diamonds are called dinari, hearts: kubbi, clubs: kayi, spades: bogolu. These last terms are either

438
Internal Trade

439
External Trade

462
Division Of Labor By Gender

484
Travel

492
Animal Transport

493
Vehicles

524
Games

531
Decorative Art

533
Music

534
Musical Instruments

535
Dance

558
Downward Mobility

567
Slavery

574
Visiting And Hospitality

576
Etiquette

577
Ethics

585
Nuptials

601
Kinship Terminology

608
Artificial Kin Relationships

627
Informal In-Group Justice

671
Legal Norms

Kanuri or Arabic, more or less distorted, or translated from one of these two languages.

kaša, or: keša: beard.

kašera, or Košera: Daza word sometimes used to mean the braids that frame the face.

kašiša: different and old things, mixed things.

kašim: water that wells up; spring and the little pool to which it gives rise. This pool, if it is very big, is called: fodi.

kasogo: Kanuri and Teda word. Trade, market, commercial action (selling or buying). Tezerda turko kasogo yuyurto: "the merchants have brought fabrics to sell." Although the Teda are willing to transport goods for the Administration ■ 83120 cont.or for Fezzanese and Hausa merchants, provided their camels do not suffer neglect, and though they gladly undertake commissions for their relatives and friends when they go to Kavar to buy fabrics, or to Fezzan and Bornu, or sometimes even to Darfur, they leave the transaction to Hausa, Kanuri and Arabs. Their economy is essentially an economy of gifts, in which the circulation of goods follows the cycle of "sadaga" (see this word), family festivals and indemnities of all kinds. The trade to which they are accustomed assumes guests; it does not necessarily imply a recourse to money, and can be made by a direct exchange of concrete merchandise. Even with the actual circulation of monies, the idea of an objective market price remains foreign to the Teda. The price of a thing, for them, depends, on the one hand, on need or the desire they have for it subjectively, on the other hand, on arbitrary equivalences not connected with each other, which result in extraordinary contradictions. For example, in Djado, in 1943, a goat was sold for 75 francs to the French, as an officer had decreed 20 years before, two times more for a Teda if there was an occasion for it, and they adhered to the principle that a light offense could be compensated equally by the gift of a camel of two years, six goats or 60 francs (say, 12 "gurs" which formerly 121 were in silver but which no one dreamed of increasing now that they are on paper). At the time of the Tuareg caravan in the autumn of 1936, the exchange rate, according to the report of Lieutenant Coste, was established thus: in cash, a measure of salt for 20 centimes, eight measures of wheat for 13 francs, five measures of millet for six francs, 15 centimes, 23 measures of dates for ten francs; and in kind: two measures of millet for three measures of dates, eight measures of millet for 35 measures of salt, one measure of wheat for two measures of dates, seven measures of wheat for 35 measures of salt, so that they ended up with the following absurdity:

—two francs 60 of millet would be the equivalent of two francs 30 of dates, ten francs 40 to seven francs of salt;

—one franc 62 of wheat to one franc 54 of dates, and 11 francs 34 to seven francs of salt. The Teda are not aware of these discrepancies. In legal matters they choose those settlements of the alleged equivalence which best fit the gravity of the case and the situation of the parties; in commercial matters, everyone is concerned only with the concrete purchase as he sees it. Only the camel represents an easily transported commodity and equally desired by all in the entire Teda world, for the laws of supply and exchange are pretty well regulated in this matter. ■ 84121 cont.this matter.

Still, even in this case, one must take into account that the Teda sells only under pressure of need, compulsion or out of friendship, and that he buys only for enjoyment.

kastedenne, kastenne, kastedente: to move off, hence: to scorn—to quarrel.

katomeri (I): to border (from ka: mouth, and: tomere: to build).

karbo, or: kerkodo: Salvia aegyptiaca: plant eaten by camels and goats.

697
Prisons And Jails

714 Uniform And Accouterment

754
Sorcery

757
Medical Therapy

779
Theological Systems

782
Prayers And Sacrifices

784
Avoidance And Taboo

805
Ordering Of Time

821
Ethnometeorology

824
Ethnobotany

825
Ethnozoology

834
General Sex
Restrictions

844
Childbirth

846
Postnatal Care

852 Ceremonial During Infancy And Childhood

853
Infant Feeding

857 Childhood Activities

866
Independence Training

881
Puberty And Initiation

kaule, yuttar, kaule catto: to quarrel.

kay: clubs of the card game; guinea-fowl.

kaya: circumcision (Kanuri word), see: kafo.

kayale, or: kalaye: a kind of black and white bead.

kayena, or: kayenka: lid of a leather-edged basket, of wooden dishes or of a calabash.

kayi (pl. kaye): a mount, beast of burden (donkey, horse, camel, ox).

kayii (pl. kayia): key.

kayor, kayi, kayendor (?): to escape danger, to avoid.

kayuge: confluence.

kayuwu: see: kagajirede.

kasar, kasci, kazar: to pull out, lay aside—become mixed up (see kastedenne).

kazar, yegas, kasar, or: kezzar, yiges, kessar: to wash;—tidigazzi, ndigazzi; tigazzi, tidigasi, ndigasi, tigasi: to wash oneself (three persons singular and plural).

kazzar, yegas, kaser: to laugh (kuni: joke).

kazzo: saliva.

kazalo: plant climbing on trees; (liana?) its fruits, when they are ripe, burst open by themselves (Leptadenia pyrotechnica?).

keadono: small square generally bounded by large stones and set beside the hearth 122 for various domestic uses, for example: to throw out water, wash one's hands, keep wood, set the cook pot that one takes off the fire.

kebedar, yeyeb, kebetar: to bring several things at the same time (collective of: kurtar)—to give back.

keдар, yegedes, kedesar: to lose.

kederi: indemnity fixed in advance by the village chief against violation of one of his regulations, generally about the harvesting of dates.—damages.

kedemi, or: kodomi: small mortar, for instance for perfume; its pestle is called kurcemi (see konoso).

keđinar, kedeki, kedikar: to lift up, to raise—kedakona or kedekonda, past participle.

keeso: see orme: orme keeso: donkey with black snout.

85122 cont.

keker: see cecer.

kekerj, or: kokori (pl. kekere): cushion of adofa or woman's saddle. In a general way, a synonym of kodofo: front pad of the pack-saddle of the camel.

kela: women who dance to the tom-tom, in a line or a circle.

kelano: lacustrine worm.

kela ar, kelaki, kelakar: to balance.

kele, or: kelle, or: kellede: sugar, either European sugar or sugar of the doom nut or water of date pulp.

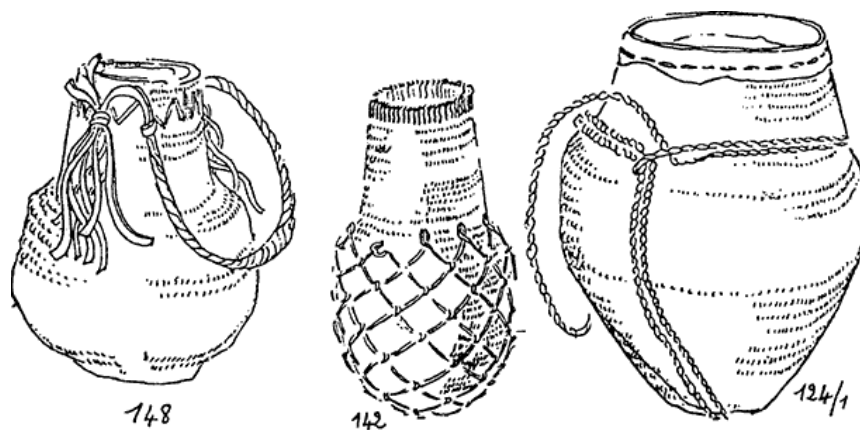

kele: a game somewhat like checkers.

kelekeleso: any small sand lizard.

kelekelesoa: herb of Bornu, the roots of which are burned as perfume.

kelekeli: bracelet of leather, gold or silver filaments, twisted.

kelemi, or: kelei, or: kere, diminutive: kerei, pl. kora, pl. of kelemi: kalama: basket of fibers of doom-palm leaves, woven with a puncheon; with straight neck, it is closed with a lid fastened to the inside of the neck (M.H., Col. Le C., 32–50: 137–148). The kelei sene is used to hold meal or seeds (M.H., 142). Height: 30 centimeters. The kelei dune is used as a churn (M.H., Col. Le C., 124/1). It is hung from a tripod or a branch of a thorn bush, and a woman or a child makes it swing with a steady movement.

123

kellelli, or: kidiki, or: hiiki, or: kugu: see kugu.

kelenar, or: kilinar, keleyi, kelentar: to agitate, to stir—to roll (a mat)—to spread out with one's hand—to wrap, to roll up, to blow (of the wind)—to stretch out—The middle form: keledudenne, kelendenne, keledenne, means to roll over or to be rolled, sometimes to embrace.—kisiner 86123 cont. keledenne: "my belly is rolling over": I am very hungry.

kelendei: leaf of big red millet (naela mado) which is used to dye skins or doom fibers for basketry red: the kelendii are pounded and a decoction is made to which is added some native soda (ore) as a corrosive; the skin or the fibers to be dyed are then beaten.

kelley: goat with its fur spotted white, red and black (synonym of gorrey).

kenar, keye, kentar: synonym of: kegerdar, kegerce and of: nudor: to send.

kender: alfalfa (Kanuri word used by the Teda of Kawar).

kenedo: patience—kenedde: patient—kenenar (I): to have patience; to have confidence; to endure from which the imperative: keneno: "suffer," "allow"; kenedo henar: "I beg pardon—kenedo heneneri: I beg your pardon.

kenege or: kindige, or: kinige: bow—kindige mia: arrows (the word is also Kanuri).

kenesar, yegenos, kenesedar: to separate.

kenje: fever, perhaps hoof-and-mouth disease, more often malaria—tane kenjere: I have fever.

keri (diminutive kerei): basket; seems to be a general term (see: kelemi).

keri, or: kiri: cold of air.—kiride: cold, fresh.

keri (pl. kera): drawing [design] (see: arbi).

kerinor, or: kerinar, keriyi, kerintor: to draw—(see: karanor: to write).

kermador, yegermat, kermatar: to wake up.

kernao: yellow and pale green (Kanuri word).

keša: see kaša.

kesimi: muzzle that one puts on small goats to keep them from sucking their mothers.

keye: easy, slow; a slow speech easy to understand.

keyekeye or: keaide, or: keyedo: sweetly, slowly.

kezzar, yeges, kessar: see: kazar.

kezenar, keseye, kesentar: to mix—past participle: kezedede.

kezeno, or: kozen: illness; synonym of: dereno.

kezi: see kozi

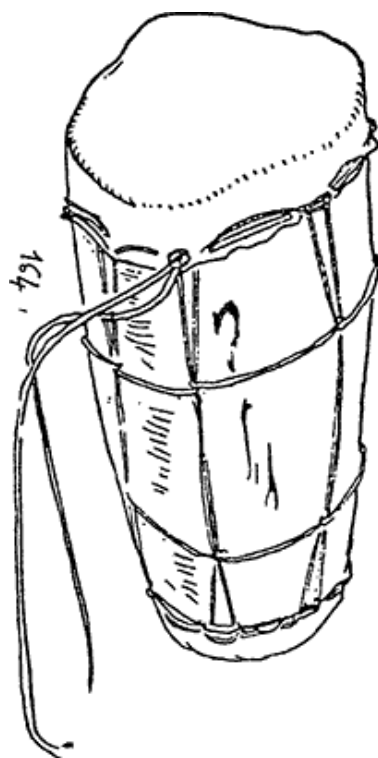

kibinikosar: I make clear (?).

kidebo, or: kideo, or: kidevo (pl. kideva): deep leather bag with straight neck (Arabic: djourab).

kidi: cloud (kidi eskano).

kidi: drum, oblong-shaped, covered at the two ends with goatskin smeared with a kind of pitch (alli). The skins are stretched with bits of wood, of cords and tighteners [?] The blacksmith hangs the drum around his neck by a cord,<sup>124</sup> and strikes it on both ends with his hands to accompnay the song to which the women dance. (M.H., Col. Le C,: 32-50-104.) Length: 52, diameters: 26 and 19. Not to be confused with the ordinary drum, or: nanjara.

87124 cont.

kidii: dog—togu: white dog—balayi: either the four feet brown or the neck brown.

kidii, or: kudi (pl. kide): bed (see kage) which is found in the hut of all married Teda.

kidi dili: wild animals, especially the lion. (Literally: dog of the bush.) (see duguli.)

kiihj, or: kifi: fillet of meat—shield of oryx skin.

kifi: seeds contained in pods.

kihikili: taking turns, either in watering or in the use of the mount when two travelers have only a single camel.

kiihj, or: kelleli, or: kugu: see: kugu.

killi: small bell that is bought from tradesmen to be hung, as a decorative badge, at the neck of a camel, or on the belt of a child, or on the stick of a newly circumcised boy (see kudu).

kindige, or: kinige: bow, which is the chief weapon of the sedentary Blacks of the South, but which, among the Teda, is merely a toy of small boys who hunt birds with it—kinige mia: the arrows.

kindili, or: kinnil (pl. kinnilo): jealous—kindilidedo, kinilto: to be jealous—or kindilidenne, kindilidenne.

kinni (p.. kinne): small; a little: in the latter sense: see konno, its synonym = addi, is rather Daza.

kininer, kiniye, kininter: to limp.

kinjilši: armpit.

kinjigi, or: kinjiyi: the assets of someone: fortune, business, health, family—125—Ndi kinjiginto? Allah hamdulla tiyi: 88125 cont."how is your business? God, praise God, I am doing (very well).

kinjini: (also a Kanuri word) miserly to the point of asking for damages (kederi) from kinsmen: it is considered disgraceful.

kir: bird trap (see: yidugusu). (M.H., Col. Le C.: 32-50-188.)

kirdor, or: kirenor, kirci, kirendor: to stir porridge with the barbi.

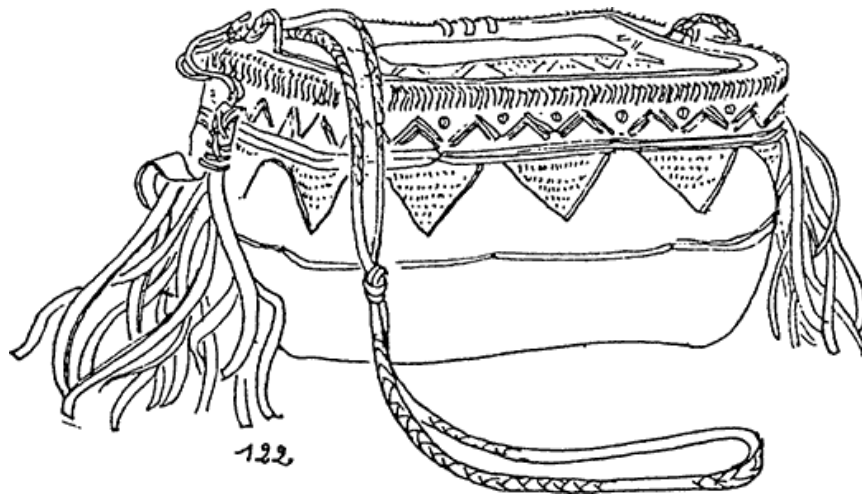

kiredi: black camel which is considered especially frequent on the mountain.

kiri: (see keri).

kiiri: wild cereal the grains of which make a red porridge, little appreciated because not very nourishing: Sorghum virgatum. (IN Kanuri: koša.)

kiši (pl. kiša): abdomen, the inside of a tool;—metaphorically: 1. = deep meaning, explanation—2. = duration—sagahanno cu kišidi: "it is two years"—kišidurde, or: kišiga: entrails—kišide: large intestine—yumme: small intestine, the two used to prepare a sort of tripe or: ntogode.

kišimunto: oblong basket of doom woven with the puncheon, the bottom and sides of which are covered with red leather. The bottom is also covered in red leather which is cut out in points towards the top. It is used as a small box in which to put tea and money.—(M.H., Col. Le C., 32-50-122.) Depth: 20—length 40—width: 20 centimeters.

koã, or: kaãgo: (Daza) week—koã gobode, or: kwode: next week—koã cocobde, or: kancetede, or: sagada: last week.

koara: always.

kobaga: fault—sin—synonym of: bigi.

kobar, yugop, kopar: to cut—kokobar (l): to cut in small pieces.

kobarkanar, yugop kanci, koparkantar (from: kobar + kanar): to pass; to cross, to clear (obstacle)—(see: tararar).

kobwe (pl. koba): hand, arm, front paw—Aõ koba zonta: “man with ■89125 cont.bad hands,” namely; murderer.

koobwe, or koowe (diminutive: kobwei): matting of basket, in a wider sense: house of mats (see yauabi) koowe osodi, or: koowe yue: mat of the house.126

These mats are made of long straight rolls sewed together. One, two or three mats make the house, two mats form the roof, the whole being supported by a light frame of poles. Sticks of wood fasten the mats together.

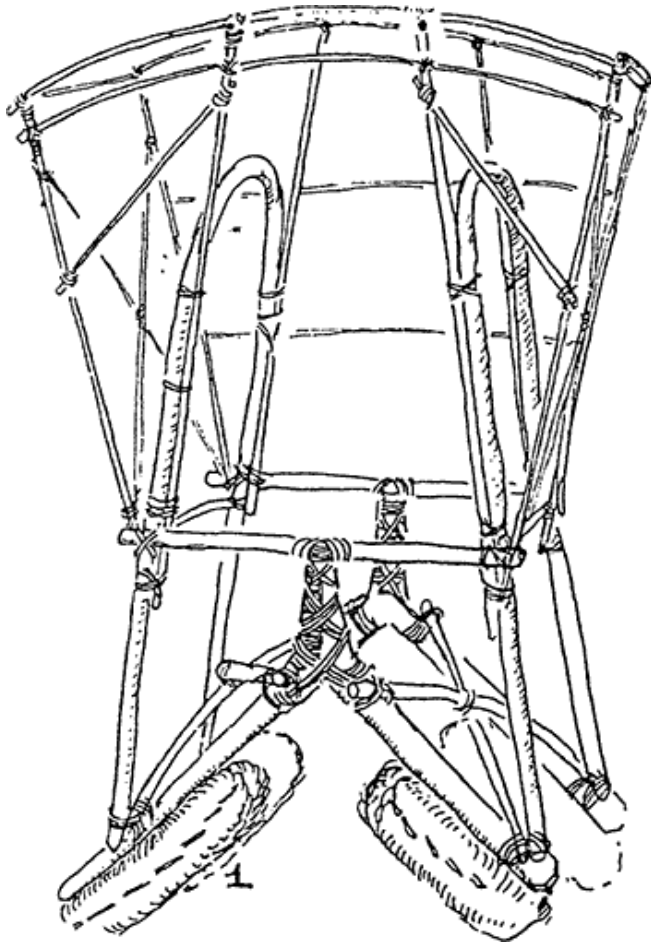

koowe forte, or fortede: (from the verb fordar): mat for the ground that is provided for a guest who wants to sit down, or is spread for him on the ground for the night. Among the Teda of the mountain and those of Djado the mats are made by the women— the Daza women, more well-to-do, buy theirs from the Azza women.

See the different kinds of mats under: kofur—sigedi—fefe. (M.H., Col. Le C., 32-50-153.)

kobo (pl. koba): shirt or blouse with wide sleeves that the Teda wear; “boubou” in the colonial argot.

kobo (pl. koba): kernel of dates that is pounded to feed goats and, in case of scarcity, humans.

kobode: camel saddle of women: the forks of the saddle support a superstructure 90126 cont. of light wood meant to be covered with fabric as a protection from the sun. (M.H., Col. Le Coeur, 32-50-1.) (See: terke).

kobaga: fault, sin, synonym of: bigi.

koboge: of pleasant taste; synonym of tokini and šide127köbör, or: köbör [sic]: the Koran; Kobor bör (I); cubwe (he): "to eat the Koran," namely: to swear by the Koran.

kobörö: child newly circumcised.

köbörüye: festival gift given the newly circumcised or the newly married couple when their seclusion ends.

kodemi (pl. kodema), or: kwadene: pendant of bone in the shape of a hollow shell. (M.H., Col. Le C., 32-50-111.)

koder, yegod, koter, or: koder yar, yogodece, koter yerdar: to count and tell. — ngodia: in order to count up — ngodi: reckoning.

koodi: the one who is hungry (see ogwe: hunger).

kodo: claiming a gift; accusation of lying: the word being taken generally in bad part (see konar).

kodobo, or: ködöbö: constellation of Pleiades (see teski).

kodoho, or kodowe: wooden mortar, synonym of konoso.

kodoli: food prohibition of a religious character (dead animal not slaughtered or slaughtered by one not circumcised). (See: yugote.)

kodomi: 1. small mortar — 2. all the small green dates, many of which fall without ripening; they are gathered by children who make necklaces of them.

kodono: woody tip of the date which must be removed before it is eaten or pounded.

kodosor, yogodos, kodosedar: to show.

kodra: accident (also a Kanuri word) see Teda: maerap.

kodri, or: kodiri (pl. kodire): lip—kodri oborene: upper lip—kodri wonne: lower lip.

kodor: loincloth of skin with the hair removed and tanned, for the slave. (M.H., Col. Le C., 32-50-105.)

koe (pl. ka): mouth, beak of a bird—in a wider sense: opening, lid, door—head waters of a river—blade of a sword.— koe yugopwe: “they have their mouths cut”: this operation which little girls about the age of ten undergo aims to swell the upper lip and make it turn blue like the gums. It takes place, generally during the season of the date harvest and on several little girls at the same time. A woman experienced in this (koe mogoni) punctures the lip and gum with a needle until they bleed then rubs them with crushed beans of “gober” and with wood charcoal. The little girls then live in a small hut where their mothers bring them food. This seclusion is divided, as a rule, into three periods interrupted by little walks with their mouths veiled. The second period of seclusion is begun by rubbing crushed green dates on the wounds. The third, 127 cont. by a rubbing with butter. The rubbings with charcoal continue until recovery. The details of the procedure may also vary, it is the result that matters above all. Two feelings, however, assert themselves absolutely in the case of all those operated on: until their mouths are not perfectly healed, they would be ashamed to let themselves be seen: it is a question of modesty. On the other hand, however, painful this operation is, they would be ashamed, this time out of coquetry, not to submit to it and to be twelve years old and still have a “red mouth”: koe mado. Some young women who are particularly coquettish have the operation performed over again after their marriage.

128

koe dönar, koe döye, koe döntar: to swear in a fit of anger.

kofenar, kofeyi, kofentar: to guard against someone or something.

kofoto (pl. koata): anklet in silver.

kofur: mat, tubular screen of straw from: gisi or: kurdi, serving to close the opening of doors of the hut, for example.

kofudi, or: kohudi: bellows of the blacksmith made of goatskin, with which the blacksmith fans his fire made of camel dung, date kernels and sometimes wood charcoal—ofroge: clay mouthpiece of the kohudi.

kogaya: hen—kogaya äker: rooster. The hen is raised especially by the Kanuri and the Teda of Kawar. It is widespread in Tibesti around the French posts, but most of the Teda loathe eating the meat of it because they regard it as a bird. Nevertheless they willingly eat hard-boiled eggs.

kogaaya: plaque of silver with three points that women fasten in their hair in the back of the head. It is the work of blacksmiths of Tibesti or Fezzan. (M.H., Col. Le C., 32-50-227.)

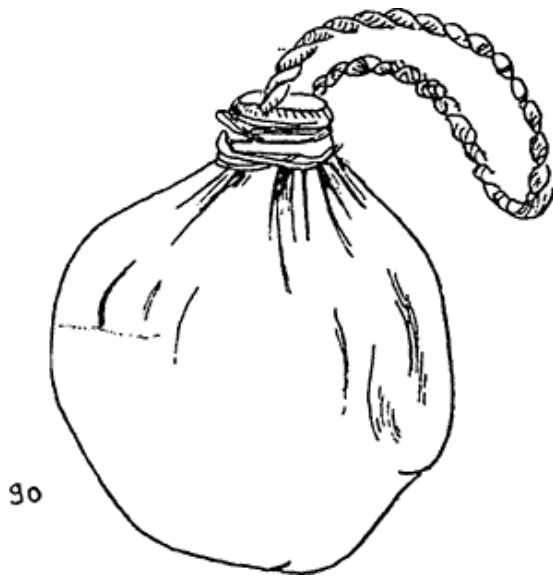

koge: suffix meaning “as,” “the same as”; synonym of kor—ai koge: as that—ndikoge: how.

koge: handful, handle.

kogulu: garlic.

köggomi, or: kögöi. (M. H., Col. Le C., 32-50-90.): pot for butter, 20 centimeters high made from the skin of the knee of the camel. They cut the skin amply around the knee and pull it off with one stroke while turning it inside out; the rounded surface of the knee forms the bottom of the gourd; one clearly sees the hairs of it at the opening. This pouch is filled (Ill. 90 appears here/ with sand, the sides are drawn tight around a flexible stick and the device is suspended from a tree for several days; the dried skin becomes a veritable parchment and one can keep butter in it for months without it becoming rancid. (See the togozzo, made in  92128 cont.

the neck of the camel.)

kogonar, kogoyi, kogontar: to scratch, to scrape—kogodedeni, kogodeni, kogodedenti: to scratch oneself.

129

kohone: jackal trap made of a hollow mound of stones arranged in such a way that the jackal, attracted by a bait of meat, in entering caused a large stone to fall, which then blocks the exit.

kohonar, kohoki, kohokar: synonym of: sunor, and caasor.

kohoro or: kohori: small cushions of skin filled with down [floss] of the palm tree (fur), and slipped under the points of support of the pack-saddle (terke) to prevent wounds—see: togofor.

kohuro: hour.

koi: place; koi troo, or lao troo: a hiding-place—back (lower back)—middle; in a broader sense, a goat or sheep in full strength (in the middle of life); in this sense also used for human beings.

koko: padlock: kokode = locked.

kokokohu: frog—(also Kanuri).

kokoge: very steep slope of a mountain. Sometimes ladder (see sellum).

kokol: peg.

kolca, or: kolia: peanuts (Kanuri word).

kollae: antelope horn that the Teda women carry in traveling; it is called: bundu adeba: "women's gun."

kollii: small drum of the free man. It is used without disgrace by the men who beat it to make the women dance; women do not use it. (M.H., Col. Le C., 32-50-164.)

kolo, of: kulo—or kule: to one side: Tenda kolaa: "next to us"—(see: ceridi).

kologe: lid of basket.

kololo: (pl. kolala): light. In a wider sense: rapid or, as an  93129 cont. adverb: quickly.

kolu: sauce made with various herbs; also designates all those herbs taken together; the word is more Kanuri. The corresponding Teda word is: bodaze.

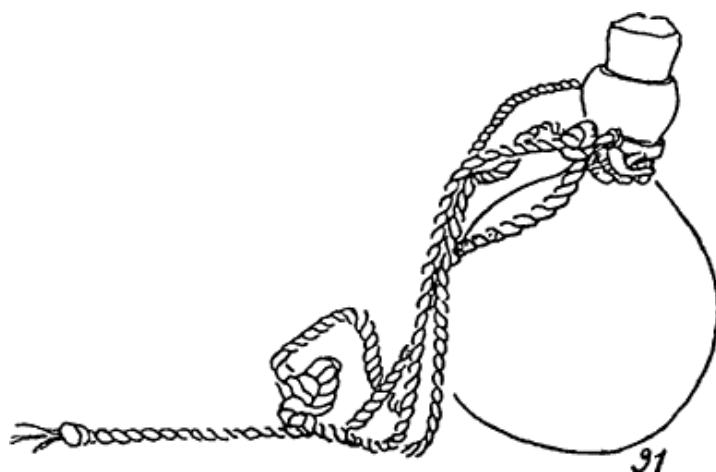

koolu: round, hard dropping of the camel.

kom: day as opposed to night; in a wider sense: the interval of 24 hours—komte: this day, today—komma: day before yesterday (see araku)—kommado: immediately—These words are more particularly Daza—in Teda one would say for kom: duski, or: tolop. komma = swiftness—kommakommado: swift.

komaso: crackled earth on the edge of the "oneri" [pasture].

come: calabash that is imported from the South and serves as a dish together with the sahari. Sometimes elongated and having a narrow neck, it serves as a bottle. (M. H., Col. Le C., 32-50-91.)

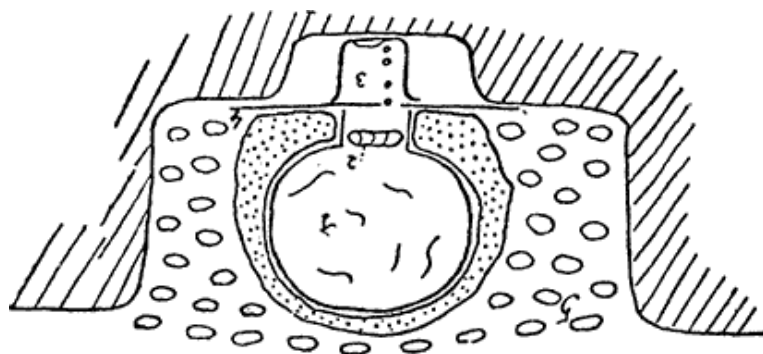

130

komodi: bran (of flour) Kanuri word sometimes used for bina.

komosi or kosi: seems to mean all grasses.

komše: tar—black animal and plant [based] which the Teda make themselves, as do the Kanuri. Some bones, slightly moist, some date kernels, some carobs of gober, some colocynth seeds are mixed and put in a large clay pot or: goe (1) the opening of which is covered with floss (of the buds) of the palm tree, or: fur; (2) this pot is inverted on a smaller pot (3) which in turn is covered with a metal sheet (4) pierced with a hole in the center. The entire apparatus is placed in a pit about 1 meter 50 deep, the bottom of which has a hollow /III. appears here/ of slight diameter where the lower receptacle is put. The sides are filled in and the walls of the big pot are covered with clay, the whole is covered with donkey and camel dung (5) which burns slowly all night. The  94130 cont.

next day the tar which has flowed, drop by drop, from the upper goe into the little pot, is collected.

In a more expeditious fashion, the Teda gather together crushed bones, date kernels, doom palm nuts in a hollow of rocks, the opening of which they close with donkey droppings which keep a slow fire going.

This tar is used as a medicine; it is meant particularly for the camel afflicted with a sort of itch (turkoo). The new goatskin bottles are smeared with it in order to waterproof them.

komuli: man who is neither intelligent nor alert; sometimes a stranger who has settled far from his homeland, or a man on a journey who puts off coming back.

komun, or: kuun (pl. kuunu): elephant that is known from rock drawings.

kondogo (pl. kondoga): satchel of leather or cloth formerly carried on the side, now at the neck in imitation of the Tuareg; their content is varied: a Teda tinder-box: a chipped flint instead of a flint, a pipe, a piece of tinder for the flint; small pieces of ribbon, old buttons, etc...

konjo: gift, synonym of: mayer.

konar, koci, kontar: to ascend, to climb, to mount an animal (yeno koatte: mounted things; mounting) in a special sense in which they use rather kwanor: to mount on a woman or a female animal, to copulate, to cover (mare).

konnar, yogon, kontar: to crush—to grind, by means of stone mill and of the primitive millstone of neolithic times, the Teda being ignorant of the North African hand mill (see konoso).

131

konner: Kanuri word having passed into the Teda dialect of the West and meaning a garden; hence synonym of bare.

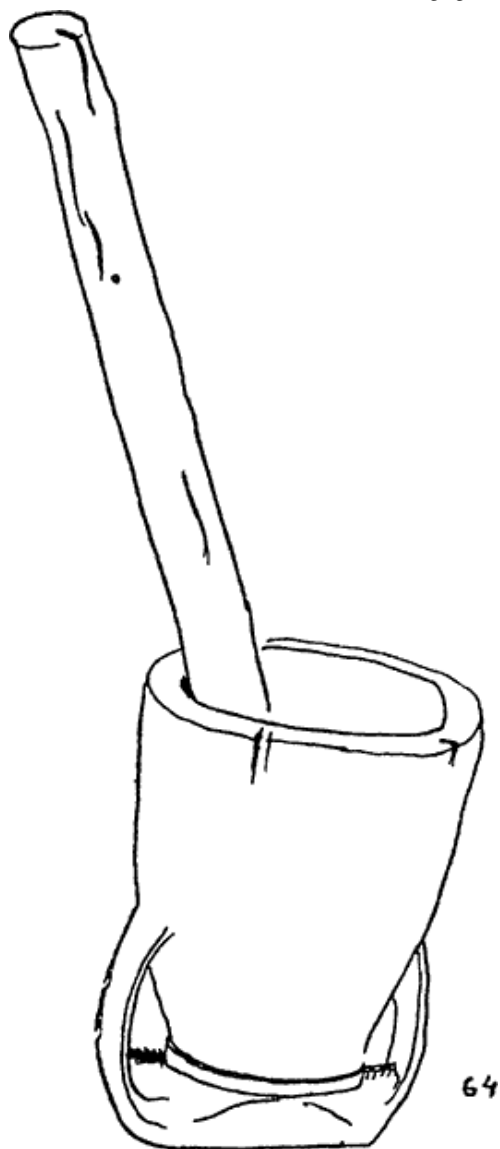

konno: pleasure.

konaner, konoyi, konontar: to be pleased—to be content—kona koserde (l): to please (give pleasure).

📄 95131 cont.

konodesi: Chenopodium murale.

konoso (M.H., Col. L. C., 32-50-64): (in Tibesti): kodoō—wooden mortar 40 centimeters high with one or two handles, which blacksmiths make and in which women pound the grain.

kontugude: miserly (see kinjini).

koŋoal: compassion.

koŋoŋo: stutterer.

koŋou (pl. koŋoa): (wet) nurse—woman who gives birth and nurses her child.

But she bears this name only for the forty days following her confinement, then she takes the name: owi.

132

kor, or: kora: suffix, synonym of koge, —aikora = like this.

kor, or: kör (pl. kora): mouse—rat.—kor soyu: jerboa.

kora, or: kore: see: kore.

korraga: cover of point of lance, made of leather, (M. H., Col. Le C., 32-50-19.)

96132 cont.

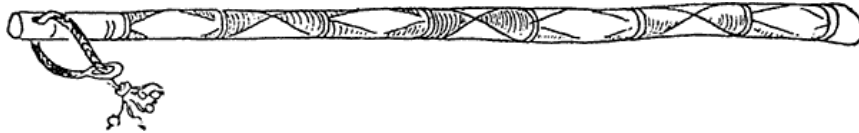

korane: fat (see wortede).

korano: grease—korano koserde, or: korano bunar: to grease, a skin, for example.

korar, yegar, kortar: to break.

korar, yugorok, kortar: to leave.

korce, or: kwarce: stick—cudgel often decorated with geometric designs or with the clan mark, and kept as a defensive weapon by a man or a woman kordar, or: kornar, korci, kortar: to ask, to seek, to beg, in a wider sense: to summon (synonym of baranor and kumor) and ask in marriage.

(in this case: korce adebi M.H. Col. 4 C. 23)—stick of camel saddle (see terke)—korcemi: short wooden pestle for the mortar called kodomi, used especially for perfumes.

korde, or: kurdi: (Juncus maritimus)—rush, very slender, growing around the pools and wells of Djado and Kaware; used to make mats, primitive brooms, lattice of sieves, etc... Goats eat the seeds.

kordebo: a tree species (?)

kore: short, small (opposite of duruso). In a wider sense, swift, or adverbially: quickly. kore koredi, or: koma komado: very quickly.

kor (pl. kora): enclosure—in a wider sense: enclosed place; field for goats and sheep (see agor). kore gimia: horse paddock.

kore or kora: conjunction or preposition suffix of time: before, until, Dogosa aguza kora: "in three days," or: "three days ago," according to the context—Dogosa agusu kora do 97132 cont. lligi: "he will come before I leave."

korere: stick; synonym of kwarce—spindle made of a small stick driven into a 133 thin piece of wood that weights it, and with which cotton thread is prepared. (See kulkudu.)

korkoi: the sides of the basket generally reinforced with an edging of leather.

korrette: matches—synonym of woget, and, more and more, of: almati.

kororo (pl. korora): loud cries of appeal (perhaps: kororo)—funeral cries: kwororo doyenti: "they utter (literally: put) laments."

korögö or: kollögö: Adam's apple.

kortar, yugurt, kortedar: to bring.

kortene: small dry date.

koru: Boscia salicifolia.

kosar: body.

koše, or: koso: prison—košede: prisoner—košenor, košeyi, košendor: to put in prison.

kosekosedede: rough, opposite of "boli."

koser, yugos, koseder: to make—In the passive: to become. The passive form can be in the third person progressive to specify the negative future: nyele leno tegese: "It will not rain" (literally: "the rain does not come, will become")—kokoser: to continue.

koyi: the outer bottom of an object. One uses rather: fwi hena (see: kiši: inner bottom).

kosi: kinship (see yele): descent; descendants; but used in this sense only in case it refers to families of chiefs, such as those of Tomagra and Gounda.

košii, or: kosimi: see kesimi.

kosomo or: kosoō: shrub of Djado (Capparis decidua) the wood of which, in burning, releases a fragrance good for women in labor.

kosonar (or kohonar), kosoye, kosentar: to fling, to throw.

kootte (pl. koatta): sheepskins with the wool—(koatta yurowa).

koowe: see kobwe.

koy: naked.

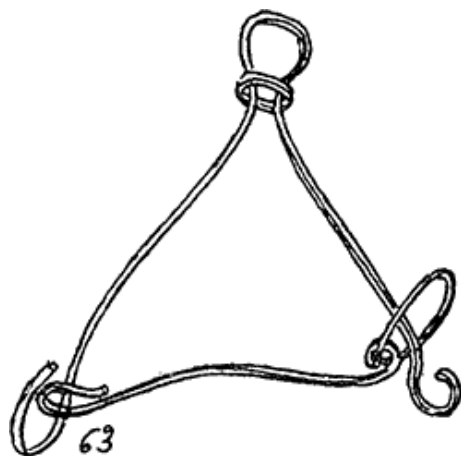

koyede: uncircumcised.

koyolo: anklet of copper that little girls wear, generally two on each leg.

kozena (see Kanuri: karimbo): herb of Djado (Leptanenia pyrotechnica): as an infusion makes women and female camels fecund.

kozi, or: kezi: bridle of camel; it is fastened to a device of iron or copper placed over the nose of the camel. (see koskori.) The kozi is made by the blacksmith. (M.H., Col. Le C., 32-50-63.) /Illus. appears here/

98133 cont.

kret: cereal for picking.

kubu: piece of leather decorated with cowries. It is rectangular, and the cowries sewn onto it take on various kinds of geometric designs. Among the Daza, it is the work of women who often put it in their trousseau to decorate the conjugal house with it.

kubukubu: machete, synonym: dage.

134

kudor, yugud, kutor: to have a family interdict—see yugote.

kudu: stick decorated with notches of various colors and ornamented with a cowrie or a bead and a little bell, with which the circumcised youth makes the round of gift [acceptance] when he is healed, and which he then throws in the water. The stick is likewise carried by the newly married couple during the three days of semi-seclusion which follows the seven days of total seclusion. To lay stress on the decoration of the kudu, one sometimes specifies: kudu gallagalla (see kafo).

kudufu: bracelet of small beads sewn on leather, which the women buy from Arab merchants.

kuduguri: wild turtle-dove that adults must spare but that children amuse themselves by trapping and eating.

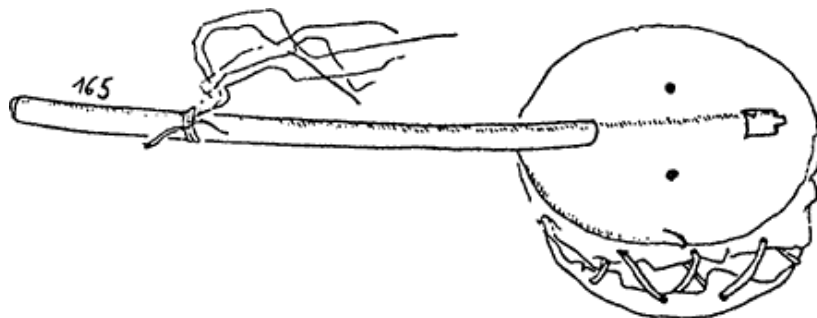

kudumuri, or: kusumuri: herb shooting up after the rains in the entire Teda domain (Aerva persica).

kuduwe: cache of meat of wild sheep, in the rocks.

kugu or: kiiki or: kelleli: fiddle made of two horsehairs stretched on a neck of a palm rib, 56 centimeters long and with a resonance box consisting of a /illus. appears here/ wooden dish or a calabash or a pan, and covered with a camel skin. A small bridge ensures the tension of the strings. The men, seated, play it to amuse themselves in company. —(M.H., Col. Le C., 32-50-165.)

kugumi or: kiikimi: bow made with horsehair.

kukur: first milk of goats after dropping their young, which is consumed cooked; it is a food that is very much appreciated. —See aner, which means the same milk, but raw. 📄99134 cont.

—See aner, which means the same milk, but raw.

kulekule: small white worm of the gardens.

kulo: (likewise Kanuri)—anus—[tobacco] pipe which can be made from a hollowed-out doom nut or two gun cartridge shells [?] fitted together. Most of the men and some old women smoke, at least on occasion. But for most of the young women this would be considered very indecent and none would do it, unless in her house and exceptionally, as a remedy.

kulusu, or: kölösö: cover.

kumor, kumci, kumbar: (synonym of baraner and kordar)—to seek (seems to belong to the speech east of Tibesti).

kumuqil: instrument with teeth, that is to say: 1. the small saw which is used in Fezzan to cut the clusters of dates (M.H., Col. Le C., 32-50-40); 2. a comb.

135

ku□or, koci, kuntor: to ask someone for the return of the gift one has given him; it is considered not very honorable.

kuni: a joke.

ku□or, kuki, kunkor: to call by crying out.

kur, or: gur, or: yidugusu: (see this last word).

kurcanu (pl. kurcano): cheekbones.

kurgum: Kanuri and Teda name for the root of a plant of Bornu and Zeila which, pounded and boiled with native soda, kurri, or: kurru: Ziziphus mauritania, or Spina Christi (according to Aubréville): the fruit of it is eaten and the wood in burning gives off a smoke that is supposed to ease women's labor pains.

kurri: flat part of the leg above the knee.

kurri boli: place, hollow where the sand is particularly clean.

kurikuri: court, a space of clean sand in front of the house.

kurini, or: kuri (pl. kure): crescent-shaped dune.

kurinor, kuriyi, kurintor: to go around—to pass beside—to change the way.

kuriti: Astrologus pseudotrigonus.

 100135 cont.

kurōwo: death (Kanuri word).

kurs (pl. kuruso): seat (Kanuri).

kurto-kurto, or: kurtugi: small geographical basin, ink well.

kurtu: abrupt foot of a dune.

kuru: pocket of water in a hollow or rock—pool in dry river bed.

kurugu (pl. kuruga): see kollogo, or: korugo: Adam's apple.

kurugurti, or: keregerti, or kerekere: wide and flat stones planted in a circle in the ground of the house in the middle of which one puts the stones of the hearth.

kurusu: spinster—synonym of dageno.

kuši: outer part of the bark of certain trees, of the Odri, for example, the shavings of which are used in the preparation of the goatskin bottles (see sine).

kutugur: hail, which is not rare in Tibesti.

ku'un (pl. kuunu) or komun: elephant which is known in Tibesti from rock drawings.

kuye: easy.

kwademi: see kodemi.

kwano: geographical basin.

kwarce: see: korce.

kwe: watering plot of a garden, from about one meter by 75 centimeters. While a worker draws water from the well and pours it into the main irrigation channel (yige deri) which is itself divided into branches (olo, pl. ola) bounding the squares, a child or an old woman opens and closes the squares by making a gap in the rim of earth or by filling up this gap.

kwi: between—kwihentahado: between them.

---

Human Relations Area Files

755 Prospect Street

New Haven, CT 06511

General Inquiries: ✉ hraf@yale.edu

Issues and Bugs: ✉ hraf-support@yale.edu

Terms and Conditions · Accessibility · Cookie Policy