275 "Two [unknown]Haw[unknown]adlā fought. They said: 'I am more of a thief than you!' 'No! I am more of a thief than you!' Then one [of them] said: 'I shall steal the eggs of that dove in the tree, without her perceiving it.' 'So be it! I shall watch you!' the other said. The former jumped into the tree. He seized the dove's eggs. He let them fall into the other hand. With this one he takes them, into that one he drops them. Then the other man, who is below, steals them from the hand. Did not the thief drop into his left hand the eggs that he took with the right one? When again he raises his right hand, in order to introduce it into the dove's nest, the thief who is below removes from the hand the eggs taken. He steals them in turn. They came down from the tree. One said: 'Where are the eggs that were in your hand?' 'I do not know!' he said. Then the other one said: 'Here they are!  114 Thus, am I not more of a thief than you?' He said: 'You are indeed more of a thief than I am (¹).' "
