Section Title(S)

Terms Applied to Consanguineous Kin by the Generational Method

In three instances the diminutive is made simply by adding the suffix ma ("small" or "young") to the term. In the other two instances the term is modified in forming the diminutive.

With respect to the tsu-//ga pair of terms, an older man termed tsu by a younger man or by a younger woman terms both the younger man and younger woman tsuma. An older woman termed //ga by a younger man or by a younger woman terms the younger man tsuma, the younger woman //gama. In respect to the !gun!a-tŭn pair of terms, an older man termed !gun!a, or tŭn!ga w.s., by a younger man or by a younger woman terms the younger man !guma and the younger woman toma. An older woman termed tŭn by a younger man or by a younger woman terms the younger man !guma or toma, the younger woman !guma.

Ego applies the terms !gun!a (or tŭn!ga w.s.) and tŭn to persons in his own generation and in generations alternate to his own; he has the joking relationship with anyone to whom he applies these terms. (Women commonly use tŭn!ga for their grandfathers rather than !gun!a, but !gun!a w.s. does occur.) Ego applies tsu and //ga to persons in generations adjacent to his own or alternate with these latter, and he avoids joking with them.

!Gun!a means "big [or old] name"—!gu, "name," n!a, "big" or "old." The diminutive form is !guma, "small [or young] name." In kin terms, !gu occurs only in combination with either n!a or ma, never alone. With the exception of the words !hoa, "man," used as the term for husband, and tsau, "woman," used as the term for wife, all the other terms, so far as I know, are specific kinship terms with no application other than that of designating certain kin or affinal relationships.

Another term comes from the word !gu; it is ˘di !guma. ˘Di means female, !guma is the same word as above, meaning small or young name. ˘Di !guma is applied m.s. and w.s. only to women who have the same name as one's mother and is an alternate to //ga in this one sense. It is rarely used, and I have omitted it from the figures.

Kinship Terminology

By standing sticks in the sand to represent persons and ascribing identity to them beginning with known, near kin, we were able to describe the relationships of siblings of grandparents, siblings of great-grandparents, and second and third cousins. Informants clearly recognized the blood ties in those relationships. Their marriage regulations prohibit marriage with second and third cousins, as well as first, because  214 of blood ties. Nevertheless, these more remote kin are considered to be in a category different from the nearer kin to whom kin terms are ascribed as in Figure 2. I did not feel that the categorization was formal or that clear, consistent lines were drawn. People's feelings in this respect would depend probably on circumstances; a kinsman with whom one had lived or had visited often, whose name one knew, would be considered nearer than a kinsman one had never seen. By and large, however, people did not think of the more remote kin as being a part of the constellation of persons who were their very own people, the people to whom they belonged. They use the phrase "my people" for those related to them as in Figure 2 and say they are people who "own" each other (ju-s-a e!ka kxei akwe, "people who own each other"). They make a distinction between people who own each other and more distant kin. "We name our children for our people," they say. "Those people [the more distant kin] would name their children for their people."
