The primary affines parallel ego's nuclear family and, together with it, form a group of close relatives, which I believe can be thought of as the core of the !Kung kinship system. Characteristic of this whole core is the fact that terms are fixed specifically in the relationships—in the affinal as well as the parent-child and sibling relationships. Nothing changes the terms. The homonymous method of giving terminological position to the relative according to his name does not operate. The fixed, specific terms set this core of relatives apart from ego's other relatives to whom he applies terms. To his other lineal and collateral kin and his secondary affines (to be described later), the generational terms are applied (tsu-//ga, !gun!a-tūn), and they may be applied through the factor of the name by the homonymous method.

Twenty-two affinal relationships are primary in the above sense. They are: the spouses of ego's siblings; ego's spouse; the parents and siblings of ego's spouse, and the spouses of those siblings; the spouses of ego's offspring, and the parents of those spouses.

Of the terms used for primary affines, three (!go, !kwi, and tsŋ) are the sibling terms. A man explained the use of the term !go for WiSiHu by saying, "That man and I married sisters. We are therefore like brothers." The same sort of analogy could be made for using the term !kwi for HuBrWi.

Two generational terms, tūn and tūn!ga, are applied to affines as well as to consanguineous kin. Tūn is applied to kin m.s. and w.s., to affines by men only; tūn!ga is applied to affines m.s. and w.s., to kin by women only.

Three pairs of terms are applied exclusively to affines: !hoa ("husband") and tsau ("wife"); ≠tum and /utsu; n!unba and n!untai.

Kinship Terminology

The affinal terms are reciprocal in pairs and the pairs maintain consistency in joking. For example, a man terms his SiHu tūn!ga; to that man ego is WiBr, who is also termed tūn!ga. A woman terms her SiHu tūn!ga. She is WiSi to him and is termed tūn by him. A man terms his WiFa ≠tum; he is DaHu to that man, also termed ≠tum. T□ a woman HuFa is ≠tum; she is SoWi to him, termed /utsu. Ego and WiSiHu are !go and tsĩ to each other, and so forth. Relative age is recognized as in  217 all application of terms. A diminutive is used by the older person for the younger, except that ≠tum is often used when the diminutive ≠tuma would be strictly correct.
