Section Title(S): 2. THE BEER OF THE WATER (Doro Remvura)

Since the ritual refers to pregnancy, it is necessary on this occasion to point out the necessity and existence of the alien clan — because only the alien clan provides the “amniotic fluid”. One’s own existence depends on alien blood, and the “child from within” alone can, through his person, provide a reference to the sister (who brought the cattle) as well as to the existence of the alien clan. By drinking the “beer of the water”, however, the muzukuru represents still something else. He demonstrates, the Karanga explain, that he himself reaps the “benefit” of the “amniotic fluid” because he can marry women from the dead man’s clan (cf p. 175*, the joking relationship).

If the son of a daughter of the deceased drinks the beer this does not change anything because he too has alien blood and so can represent his mother (the dead man’s daughter). When the mother married she brought the cattle for her brother but, in certain circumstances, it also brought her father a second or third wife.

This brings us to the choice of the muzukuru at the ceremony for the woman. In her case, the muzukuru must be her daughter’s son, i.e. a grandson. It cannot be her son’s son because he is consanguine with the lineage into which she married. And as, according to the Karanga, the opening of one’s own circle to an alien one is to be shown, it has to be the child of her daughter. This daughter alone, through her marriage, opened an alien circle, and her son (a non-consanguine muzukuru) is the corresponding representative of this opening which shows from where the cattle came that brought the “amniotic fluid” for the clan. Again it is the non-consanguine muzukuru who can refer to the clan-alien origin of the fertility. In the case of the woman, the grandson represents his grandmother but, at the same time, also alien blood.

For the sake of completeness let me add that, for a woman, the consanguine muzukuru (nephew, son of her brother) is a much more important person because he shows where the cattle went (owner of the cattle, cf p. 170* seq).

To sum up: a birth is only possible through the admission of alien blood. "Amniotic fluid" can flow only because alien uteri bear one's children. The non-consanguine muzukuru symbolizes with man and woman the necessity and importance of the alien clan. With the muzukuru one honours at the graveside those persons to whom one owes this "amniotic fluid" which alone makes possible the fulfilment of the  278 ego (one only becomes an ancestral spirit through one's own children and grandchildren, cf p. 24*). At the grave, a further step has been taken towards the newly beginning existence, and this is presented by means of a birth symbolized in the amniotic fluid. This event is embodied symbol-representatively in those persons who made it possible. This is the deeper significance of the ceremony of the "beer of the water".

But how can the beer have a connection with the amniotic fluid? The Karanga do in fact see a close connection here, for the preparation of the beer symbolizes the beginning and the life-cycle of man, and simultaneously a close connection is established with the symbols of blood and fertility. This symbolism is not discussed here (for details cf pp 140*, 219*). Beer too is a means of getting into contact with the ancestors (cf p. 39*).

With the ceremony of the doro remvura the following has so far been accomplished: the cause of death has been established, so one knows from where the danger came. This was communicated to the dead man. The deceased has been liberated from the grave, a procedure which is a symbolical birth. Equipped with the new knowledge the deceased can, however, become a still greater danger, a danger which must be averted. By the "cooling ceremony" the "thirst" he had to endure because of his isolation may be quenched, but the dead man's anger has not been appeased by it. To deal with that, the next step is to sacrifice the "goat of anger".
