Section Title(S): Structure Of A Village Group: Nneorie

Nneorie is also a local unit. A stranger asking where he is on the land of any of the eight major segments may be told: "This is Nneorie". Any long-resident non-member of the maximal lineage is called (Onye Nneorie), a Nneorie person. In a kin context, the term Onye Nneorie is limited to descendants of Orie. Maternal affiliation may result in a group being known as "strangers", but this does not place their local membership in doubt. In the smaller components of Umuonyeike, sons of a woman who was born in Umuonyeike but moved away, for example, to Ihitte some eight miles away, may have trouble with their fellow agnates and run away to their mother's patrilineage to settle. A proverb encapsulates this procedure: Emeruo Umunna, ejhee umunne (If one harms one's father's people, one goes to one's mother's people). There is a joking relationship with the mother's patrilineage.

As a local group Nneorie contains a most significant body of non-lineage members: women married there from outside the exogamous major segments of the lineage. Compared with other women, they are women of Nneorie for most purposes even before they are women of their own birthplaces. All the married women in Nneorie are called (Umundom), while all the women born in Nneorie are called (Umungboto).
